November 10, 2016. Volume 1; Issue 1.

What is your perspective on teaching? Are you more of a “TRANSMITTER” whose priority is transmitting the required knowledge to the student or rather a “NURTURER” who focuses more on developing trust and promoting encouragement? Did you know that your teaching perspective defines your student’s learning experience? We like to invite you to take “The Teaching Perspectives Inventory (TPI)” that will give you a perspective on your teaching.

What is TPI about?

- It is about quantifying the FIVE common perspective (Transmission, Apprenticeship, Developmental, Nurturing and Social Reform) of teachers on teaching adults and in higher education
- It is a well-researched and utilized instrument often used for Faculty development

What is TPI not about?

- It is not about “good” or “bad” teaching
- It is not about “teaching styles” or “teaching methods”
- There is no “right” or “wrong” perspective/ point of view

What is the benefit?

- TPI will help you identify your dominant perspective on teaching
- It would help you to recognize yourselves as an educator
- In cases of evaluation, it can help you justify your approach to teaching

What do I do with my results?

- Results are for your self-reflection. You do not have to share your results
- We like to invite you to share with your colleagues. It would give them an insight to their own teaching perspective
